Put a bounce in your step

Site brings luxury to travel options.

Wallbounce.com — a new travel and luxury provider — hopes to get users behind the scenes.

"It's what's next," says Robin Wilson, CEO of Wallbounce. "It's packaged opportunity. We want to take these special moments that aren't usually offered to everyone and really just give people the chance to make memories."

As envisioned by Wilson in January of 2004, Wallbounce exists somewhere between personal assistant, travel agent, concierge and genie in a bottle.

The vacation packages go beyond anything you would find on a traditional travel site. For example, a shark diving trip includes a chartered luxury tour bus from San Diego to Ensenada, Mexico, where a 116-foot yacht will depart to explore Isla De Guadalupe.

The word "luxury" comes up a lot on the site, and for good reason — while the vacation packages are definitely not for the faint of heart — including whitewater rafting, trapeze lessons, simulated air combat in a military plane — they aren't for the shallow of wallet either.

"People who use Wallbounce have a high disposable income, but that doesn't mean they want to waste it," said Wilson. "They are cultural creatures who want a unique, interactive experience."
